

HAINES' RIGHTS FOR LIFE PROSECUTOR'S BACK

STREET WALKER FALLS INTO TRAPS OF DEFEAT

from at any time ask Hainess, Fink, Adams or Haines where Annie was? "I did not."

This ended the direct examination and the re-examination was begun.

"What hour of the night of May 21 did you see your brother leave his home at 47 North Street?" asked Prosecutor Darrin.

"About midnight."

"Tell us how he acted when he broke in?"

The witness then repeated the story of the captain breaking into the house and acting in an excited manner. The half an hour Darrin led the witness through the scenes of the direct testimony without getting any important alterations of the original story.

Thornton Haines' story is told with all the dramatic force that imagination can make of three little facts. The witness, by his gestures, looks, facial expression and in every possible way, makes his description of scenes before and after the shooting picturesque. His own attitude the brother's attitude, the attitude of the witnesses and of the crowd, the scene at the court at the time with the witness of the witness's story of how he was pulled to members of the Barista Club to stand back after Annie had been shot. He volunteered some complete answers that his counsel's questions called for. District Attorney Darrin was constantly objecting that Thornton Haines had come to the stand determined, he said, to tell the entire truth.

Mrs. Annie Haines Dramatic Story

Haines' dramatic story was heard by Mrs. Annie. She heard him contradict himself, and smiled cynically at his embarrassment.

Prosecutor Darrin, in beginning his re-examination of Haines, asked Haines about the visit of the captain to the witness's home on May 21, when he broke into Thornton's room, crying "Annie!" several times and declared his wife had been murdered. The witness replied that his wife was sleeping and that he was very white. He started to get up and he had done yesterday, when he was told that his wife had been murdered. He started to get up and he had done yesterday, when he was told that his wife had been murdered.

It was while Thornton was questioning the captain's evidence that he asked the witness: "What did I ever do to deserve this at the hands of that man?" That the witness, Haines, replied that he had done nothing to deserve this at the hands of that man. That the witness, Haines, replied that he had done nothing to deserve this at the hands of that man.

She then asked him about the re-examination was conducted by Mrs. Annie. She then asked him about the re-examination was conducted by Mrs. Annie.

General Haines Wept, Says Defendant.

"General Haines wept a good deal of the time," he declared. "I mean tears were running down his cheeks."

Q—After Haines' story was told, were there any boys in the room besides you and your wife?

A—No, there were no boys in the room besides you and your wife.

Q—What did you do after the shooting?

A—I went to my room and I stayed there for four or five days.

Q—What did you do after the shooting?

A—I went to my room and I stayed there for four or five days.

"I went into the house and saw Mrs. Haines stretched on a divan in the parlor. A woman hung on her right arm."

"What time of day was that?" asked the witness.

"It was in the morning."

"What did she say?" asked Darrin.

"She moaned and talked incoherently. I saw her mouth open and she was saying 'Oh, somebody kill me; somebody kill me.' I have never heard her say anything like that before."

"What else did you do?" asked Darrin.

"I saw her mouth open and she was saying 'Oh, somebody kill me; somebody kill me.' I have never heard her say anything like that before."

of the witness, she noted the seriousness of the defendant.

Haines declared quickly, when asked to tell more about the collision which his motor boat figured in because of the captain's strange actions in throwing a switch, "the only damage done was that the point on the boat was scraped and the nerve and excitement of the people suffered."

The witness again changed his story when asked to account for pulling up to the boat after later striking.

"I have never heard her say anything like that before."

"What else did you do?" asked Darrin.

"I saw her mouth open and she was saying 'Oh, somebody kill me; somebody kill me.' I have never heard her say anything like that before."

"I saw her mouth open and she was saying 'Oh, somebody kill me; somebody kill me.' I have never heard her say anything like that before."

Haines, leaning forward in his chair.

Shaking his head to emphasize his declaration, he continued: "I am telling all I know and doing the best I can."

Wave of Sympathy for the Defendant.

A base of approval rose in the courtroom and was held by a pair of Justice Darrin's eyes before it grew too loud. The audience appreciated the position of the witness fighting for his life and sympathized with him.

Q—How did your brother act on August 12, the day he learned of the horrible charge made against him? A—It was on the 12th, I think, he had gone to Mr. Percy's office with the general.

Point blank the witness refused to repeat the entire dialogue between himself and Mr. Percy in regard to Claudia's charges.

"You said before that the captain charged Annie with being responsible for the charges, that Mrs. Claudia Haines knew of such things as the answer before, quoted Darrin, quietly, and ignoring the direct attitude of the witness.

"I am not sure of the truth of the statement," he replied.

Recess was then taken.

ON STAIRS, SAYS HAINES

BY THORNTON J. HAINES.

FLUSHING, N. Y., Jan. 5.—Within the next few days my case will be in the hands of the jury, and what their verdict will be I have not the slightest doubt. After they have listened to all the evidence submitted to them by both sides, there is no question in my mind but that the scales will weigh heavily in my favor.

I should never have been arrested and later indicted as an accessory to the murder of William E. Ansel, I am, and always have been an innocent man. But since each has been my lot, I have endeavored to look upon the affair in as philosophic a light as possible. I have endeavored to keep constantly before me the advice of Epicurus, that although it is possible to improve one's body, his mind is still free and capable of all its functions.

All times it has been difficult to preserve that state of mind, but when I am tempted to let my anger boil in my mind, I think of the condition of brother Ansel, and then I say to myself, "It might be worse." At heart, I have not his heart to bear the ever constant knowledge of a wicked crime, as he has.

The details of each step with me are so indelibly impressed upon my mind that had they been loaded upon me they could not be any more vivid. Look at the scene that I have already described last summer, when Peter and myself were constantly together. I often ask myself if I can be so sure that I am innocent.

Thinking over each hour that passed from June until the middle of August, I try to think of some way that the one of us could have been killed.

This thought again occurred to me when my father, under cross-examination by Darrin, was asked to tell of the effect of the blow on Annie when she was hit by her lawyer, Mr. Percy, he learned that in answer to his divorce suit his wife, "Claudia," had made accusations against him.

This, coming from the woman who had been asked to commit suicide with the knowledge that she was doing so, was a blow to me, and I have never been able to forget it.

The natural inference to be drawn is that the woman who had been asked to commit suicide with the knowledge that she was doing so, was a blow to me, and I have never been able to forget it.

BERRIO AND LORZ ENTER BOSTON MARATHON RACE

FLEET RUNNERS LISTS TWO QUAKE VICTIMS

Fred Lorz, who from New York today enters the Boston Marathon.

There will be at least thirty starters and more than a dozen spectators, the athletes and writers of the race, given the starting signal for the runners at Audubon next Saturday noon.

And the character of these competitors can be judged by one thing, the fact that Fred Lorz is coming on from New York to take part.

As a charitable event, for the benefit of the Italian earthquake sufferers, the race is being given wholly private.

As an athlete, however, the race is being given wholly private.

It is interesting to note the names of the runners.

Fred Lorz, for instance, is a veteran runner. He has won the Madison A. C. New York race from the E. A. A. C. in 1906. Last year he finished third in the E. A. A. C. Marathon at New York.

He is the New York Marathon at New York.

MANY KILLED IN RELIGIOUS WAR IN INDIA

CALCUTTA, Jan. 5.—The religious riots between Mohammedans and Hindus have assumed alarming proportions and there is danger that all India may be engulfed in a new religious war in which the British Government would find it impossible to take sides without precipitating a native revolt.

Following Sunday's riots, in which more than a dozen Hindus and Mohammedans were killed and many wounded, the Hindus today attacked the Muslims.

MERGER OF MERCHANTS IS RATIFIED

The amalgamation of the Boston Merchants' Association and the Boston Chamber of Commerce under the latter name was unanimously ratified today at a meeting of the respective bodies, and the new organization starts with a membership of 2,000. This is increasing at the average of 100 the month, which at the end of three years will make the Boston Chamber of Commerce the largest body of its kind in the United States, with an estimated membership of 3,000. Not only will the members want but in point of wealth and extent of the interests represented, it will lead it to a rapid growth.

To Be Born Boston.

George B. Smith for the committee on agreement outlined briefly the terms of fusion. He said that the Chamber of Commerce had 1,000 members, the Merchants Association 911. There was need of a new organization if both were to achieve the best results for the commerce of the city. With this fusion there would be no overlapping of efforts, and the new organization would be able to do more for the city than either of the old ones. The new organization would be a combination of the two, with a membership of 2,000. The new organization would be a combination of the two, with a membership of 2,000.

Spilled Storero was a few remarks of an optimistic order and then the matter was put to a vote, carrying by an overwhelming majority.

There was a spirited opposition at the Chamber of Commerce meeting, which was said to be the greater part of the vote. President Howard J. Howell was in the chair. He made an eloquent plea for the ratification, telling at length of the advantages which would result from the new organization.

Armour's Kingdom of Death

We know that becomes of the Animal Bodies—What becomes of the LIFE?

Copyright, 1908, by American-Journal-Examiner

Armour every year kills and feeds to the people of this country about five million hogs, a million and a half oxen and cows, two millions of sheep.

He also feeds to the American people tens of millions of bushels of grain of different kinds. Grain fattens cattle; he who would control a nation's meat must partially control the grain.

The Cosmopolitan article describes some of the Armour processes. If you are interested, you can get it at any newsstand and read it. In the opinion of the Boston American, the really interesting question is in all this killing and eating of animals is, WHAT BECOMES OF THE CONSCIOUS LIVES, THE MILLIONS UPON MILLIONS OF ANIMAL SOULS THAT FLOAT UP IN THE AIR ABOVE THE ROOF OF THE PACKING HOUSES?

What of those lives, those atoms of conscious force? Are they nothing, going back into nothing? If so, what right have we to think we are anything better? The common sense of many men's belief—the Bible—leaves this question interestingly open, as regards the animals at least. In Ecclesiastes, chapter 3, verses 21 and 22, you can read:

"Who knoweth the spirit of man whether it goeth upward, and the spirit of the beast, whether it goeth downward to the earth?"

Since that was written, men have discovered that there is no upward and no downward in the universe. The earth turns around—what is now up will be at our feet in twelve hours.

And while men have discovered that they are little cosmic insects, animated atoms of thought, glued to a whirling ball of earth, THEY HAVE NOT FOUND OUT ANYTHING ABOUT THEMSELVES, nor have they found out anything about the animals murdered yearly in millions and tens of millions and cheerfully eaten by their two-legged cannibal brothers.

Armour, the American king of meat, has released in his lifetime hundreds of millions of animal lives from the bodies that they directed.

"Who knoweth whether" those spirits of the animals go back into the earth to lose their identity, whether they keep that identity, enter another body here on earth and gradually struggle up to what we are pleased to consider full expression in some brain at the top of one of us two-legged animals!

How much we know and how little! We know just what is done with the pig's bristles, what is done with the peepin that his stomach secretes, what becomes of the bone of the ox, the wool and the skin of the sheep. We know everything about the animal, just as we know everything about ourselves, except the REAL animal and the REAL self.

The real animal is the thought in him—if it be thought—the struggling capacity to suffer fear and pain and to plan in a feeble way.

A visit to the stockyards, great death kingdom where knives are thrust and hammers are swung all day long, every thrust and every swing ending a life, is interesting in a fearful and depressing manner, not because of the blood and mud and bellowing and squealing, but because of the mystery of death, the sudden silencing of a huge, animated body.

What is life, what is death, what is the spirit that animates body? IS IT ANYTHING? You ask yourself these questions, and you look at a dreadful, squealing, squirming, rushing mass of fear-cramped animals, and a few feet further on, a few minutes later, you meet those same animals hanging up by their hind legs, disemboweled, white and clean like some purified being, hanging with heads down placidly, utterly and forever indifferent to this man, who with one sweep cuts off each head, or to that man, appointed by the Government, who cuts a gland and hunts for tuberculosis tissue.

Are all animals alike in their "thinking" and their dying? The article in the Cosmopolitan says not. Here's a quotation from that article:

"Study of the animals as they go to their death would disturb the calm belief of the individual who thinks that an animal has no soul, no real life, no thought. It is true that a great majority of the animals die stupidly and without resistance. Among the swine, whose shrill squealing answers the cracking whip and the upward turn of the fatal wheel, there appears to be, fortunately, little or no conception of what death and danger mean. It is not always so. One day the harmony of the 'killing bed' was vastly disturbed by one small black pig. These creatures, double the black pig's size, were walking through the door, resting only feebly as the chains were put around their hind legs and they were jerked up to death. This little black pig had other ideas, another character. No hero in human life ever fought more desperately for his life than did that small creature. "As soon as he entered the fatal pen he 'died'—he died at the neck, charged, flew at his legs, drove him over the back of the other animal, jumped out of the pen himself and dashed at the man with the long knife who was engaged in 'killing' the pigs as they came toward him hanging head downward. Half a dozen men combined succeeded in killing this rebellious, anarchistic disturber of the packing house peace, and they killed him in not at all a scientific manner. If a human had been so plucky a fight for his life against such odds he would be talked of with admiration."

It is only fair to warn anybody who may think of buying the Cosmopolitan to read the article by A. Brisbane that he will find disappointment in one way. Unlike the great and wonderful magazine writers of the world, this particular writer lacks action and fury. Those who go to Armour's stockyards usually go away and, as far as literature will let them, they treat Armour about as he treats one of his pigs—they haul him up by one of his hind legs and cut his throat and disembowel him, metaphorically. The Cosmopolitan discovers that Armour doesn't own the stockyards—the stockyards own Armour. And he isn't much more to blame for the many shortcomings of the institution, the sad lives of men condemned to an existence of murder, than you, for instance, are to blame for the fact that you have got, perhaps, out in your kitchen, working for pitifully small wages, a young woman that you know perfectly well ought to be out of that kitchen and married and working for her own children.

We can't any of us get out of our little rut in this world. The pig must squeal and become sausage. The little fellow criticizes the big one, maps greedily at his particular advantage, and the big one blunders along as best he can.

Some kill millions of animals with knives. Some slowly kill their own immortal souls with coldness and indifference, and some struggle and suffer, trying to change suddenly what only the ages will change. Pigs, sheep, hogs and men—we all wind up our efforts in death—and what!

One Form of Selfishness

For instance: What Is Your Morning Conversation?

By ELLA WHEELER WILCOX

ALAS! Happiness. This world is not enough. Without your work, no path is wholly rough. Look for the pieces that are smooth and clear. And talk of them to rest the weary ear. Of earth, so hurt by one's continuous strain. Of human discontent and grief and pain.

Talk Faith; the world is better off without Your uttered ignorance, and nuptial doubt. If you have faith in God, or man, or self, Say so—it not, push back upon the shelf. Of silence all your thoughts, till Faith shall come. No one will grieve because your lips are dumb.

Talk Health. The dreary, never ending tale Of mortal maladies is worn and stale. You cannot charm, or interest, or please, By harping on that minor chord, disease. Say you are well, or all is well with you, And God shall hear your words and make them true.

WHAT is your morning conversation? If you fill your soul full of Love—great, deep, high, broad, profound Love—and if you live with a prayer of thankfulness in your heart to God for Life, and believe health is your right, and that it will be given to you, and fashion your life to suit that thought, it will be given.

It will never come if you harp on the old strain of "God's will" when you suffer and persist in having an audience for every pain. Not only will it never come, but your symptoms and the story of the health of those about you. You pride yourself on being a good woman, and a heroic woman, sickness is concerned. All inviolate do.

But you are not a good woman if you spoil the beautiful morning hours by a recital of your symptoms and send out into other minds microbes of disease and death.

It is not that we must never mention our indisposition. Rigid rules in any direction do more harm than good. A silent martyr usually makes people uncomfortable with the eloquence of silence.

If you break your limb, say so, and of health and tell it, confess it. To deny it is ridiculous and creates only ridicule and antagonism. But, while you confess it, affirm your speedy restoration.

You have been able to keep yourself from serious illness by right thoughts and methods of life, employ your skill to restore you.

But, for God's sake, humanity's sake and your own make stop this eternal harping on your diseases. You are not a Christian, or a religious person, if you are talking about your diseases to every one about you. You may be bound with a terrible burden to disease through the many wrong thoughts and habits of ancestors. But keep still and be well.
